ABOUT PRAGUE

Prague is the capital of the Czech Republic and as such is the regular seat of its central authorities. Prague has undergone centuries of diverse cultural, social and economic development, which is reflected in its architecture. Among the most interesting witnesses to this dramatic transformation are technical monuments commemorating changes in the everyday life of our ancestors in comparison with the present day. Prague is home to a number of interesting technical buildings and other structures. This journey back in time will take you to places such as the Prague underground spaces with its huge collector system; the New Town Water Tower; the Nusle bridge; the Pacold kiln; Vetrnik, a former windmill; the Petrin funicular; the Krizik Fountain; and the exhibitions at the National Technical Museum. Also of interest is the Wastewater Treatment Plant in Bubeneč, which helped Prague become one of the most modern cities in Europe at the beginning of the 20th century. Tom Cruise filmed the last episode of the Mission: Impossible series here. Prague's historic gardens and parks are truly some of Prague's greatest treasures. There are over two hundred - the oldest of them was founded in the middle Ages, and more often than not, they offer breath-taking views of the city. The first Prague gardens were monastic gardens; private gardens, adjacent to palaces or expensive town houses, came later during the Renaissance. Each period introduced its own unique style, layout (which generally reflected contemporary philosophy) and understanding of space into garden design. Perhaps the most revolutionary changes in garden design came during the Baroque period, where the monumentality of the architecture was reflected in the external environment in the garden. Visiting the Palace Gardens below Prague Castle, the Petrin Hill gardens or Wallenstein Gardens are practically required of all visitors to Prague.
