Getting Around Copenhagen

Copenhagen has a long history well integrated with today's modern life. It is one of the largest cities in northern Europe, is also one of Europe's busiest hubs. The city's location has throughout centuries in an almost natural way created commercial routes to far and near. Copenhagen is very easy to reach by air, sea or land. Copenhagen Airport, Kastrup, (airport code CPH) is a major Northern European air hub with direct flights to most larger European cities as well as transatlantic and other far away destinations. With over 1.1 million inhabitants, the Greater Copenhagen area represents one-third of Denmark's entire population in an integrated labour market, the result of a well developed infrastructure. Greater Copenhagen has had an industrial change from manufacturing activities to a mix of high-tech and knowledge intensive sectors as well as an increase in the service-sector. Some 80 percent of the working population is employed in the service sector. The remaining 18 percent is in manufacturing and around 2 percent in agriculture and fisheries. The Danish workforce is very well-educated. Copenhagen is right on the coast of the Oresund, in the south-east of the country on the islands of Amager and Sjælland. Since way back people from all over the world have settled in Copenhagen and made it their hometown and this has contributed to the city's charming international characteristics. Copenhagen offers excellent living standards based on a long range of weighted factors within education, health, economy, social conditions, culture, welfare, etc. According to international studies, Denmark has one of the highest living standards in the world.

Glorious Food

Denmark's capital has grown into a true gastronomic metropolis. And while traditions run deep, new innovation continually adds flair to the city's ever-evolving tasting menu of flavors. Until a few years ago, Danish food was essentially associated with potatoes and bacon, and Danish cuisine was completely unknown outside the country. Not anymore. Over the last decade, the New Nordic Cuisine has revolutionized Danish gastronomy and created an entirely new focus on local ingredients. It has meant a renaissance of classic Danish dishes, which are currently available in modern versions at several of Copenhagen's best restaurants. Even so, many Danes still love to eat very traditional foods like porridge, open sandwiches and the classic roast pork with parsley sauce - of course served with a glass of good Danish beer.

Architecture

The architecture of Copenhagen in Denmark is characterised by a wide variety of styles, progressing through Christian IV's early 17th century landmarks and the elegant 17th century mansions and palaces of Frederiksstad, to the late 19th century residential boroughs and cultural institutions to the modernistic contribution of the 20th century such as Arne Jacobsen's National Bank and SAS Royal Hotel. Copenhagen is recognised globally as an exemplar of best practice urban planning. Its thriving mixed use city centre is defined by striking contemporary architecture, engaging public spaces and an abundance of human activity. These design outcomes have been deliberately achieved through careful replanning in the second half of the 20th century, with notable contributions both by leading international architects and a wave of new successful Danish architects.
