About Rotterdam

Rotterdam is a city in the Netherlands, in South Holland inside the Rhine—Meuse—Scheldt river delta at the North Sea. Its history goes back to 1270, when a dam was built in the Rotte waterway, after which individuals settled around it for wellbeing. In 1340, Rotterdam was allowed city rights by the Count of Holland. A noteworthy strategic and monetary focus, Rotterdam is Europe's biggest port, and has a population of 633,471 (2017), the second-largest in the Netherlands, just behind Amsterdam.

Rotterdam is known for the Erasmus University, its riverside setting, enthusiastic social life, and oceanic legacy. The close entire obliteration of the downtown area in the World War II Rotterdam Blitz has brought about a changed structural scene, including high rises composed by eminent engineers, for example, Rem Koolhaas, Piet Blom, and Ben van Berkel.

Rotterdam experiences a temperate oceanic climate similar to all of the coastal areas in Netherlands located near to the coast, its climate is slightly milder than locations further inland. Winters are cool with frequent cold days, while the summers are mild to warm, with occasional hot temperatures. Temperatures above 30 °C are not rare during summer, as well as temperatures under -5 °C during winter. Christianity is the largest religion in Rotterdam, the second and third largest religions are Islam, Hinduism. While about half of the population has no religious affiliation. Rotterdam has always been one of the main centres of the shipping industry in the Netherlands. Rotterdam was the world's seventh largest container port in terms of twenty-foot equivalent units handled.

Rotterdam's calculated achievement depends on its vital area by the North Sea, at the mouth of the Nieuwe Maas channel driving into the Rhine– Meuse– Scheldt delta. The streams Rhine, Meuse, and Scheldt give conduit access into the core of Western Europe, including the exceedingly industrialized Ruhr. The broad conveyance framework including rail, streets, and conduits have earned Rotterdam the nicknames as "Portal to Europe" and "Passage to the World".
