Perth is the capital and greatest metropolis of the Australian state of Western Australia (WA). It is named after the metropolis of Perth, Scotland and is the fourth-most populous city in Australia, with a populace of 2.06 million dwelling in Greater Perth. Perth is phase of the South West Land Division of Western Australia, with the majority of the metropolitan vicinity located on the Swan Coastal Plain, a narrow strip between the Indian Ocean and the Darling Scarp. The first areas settled have been on the Swan River at Guildford, with the city's central commercial enterprise district and port (Fremantle) both later situated downriver.

Perth was established by using Captain James Sterling in 1829 as the administrative center of the Swan River Colony. It received town repute (currently vested in the smaller City of Perth) in 1856 and used to be promoted to the reputation of a Lord Mayoralty in 1929. The metropolis inherited its identify due to the effect of Sir George Murray, then Member of Parliament for Perth shire and Secretary of State for War and the Colonies. The city's populace accelerated appreciably as a end result of the Western Australian gold rushes in the late nineteenth century. During Australia's involvement in World War II, Fremantle served as a base for submarines working in the Pacific Theatre, and a US Navy Catalina flying boat fleet was based at Matilda Bay. An influx of immigrants after the war, predominantly from Britain, Greece, Italy, and Yugoslavia, led to speedy population growth.
